

Git fundamentals (group exercise)

For you warm up this morning you'll need to pull the changes to this repository to your own forks.

If you navigate to:

`https://www.github.com/<YOUR-USERNAME>/Daily-Warm-Ups`

You'll find a page that looks something like this

Two important points here are that we are behind the "upstream" master.

This branch is 11 commits behind DS-17:master.

Take 5 minutes to read the following post on stack overflow which goes more into what `upstream` and `downstream` mean in the context of distributed version control systems like `git`.

Discuss what advantages and disadvantages such systems provide for:

- employers
- developers
- from a scientific perspective

Share your groups thoughts in the `#ds17` channel on slack.

Pulling changes to your fork:

First click the `New pull request` button:

1 commit 2 branches

h: master ▾

Select "compare across forks"

ed to, you can also compare across forks.

Now in the second drop down select the upstream master

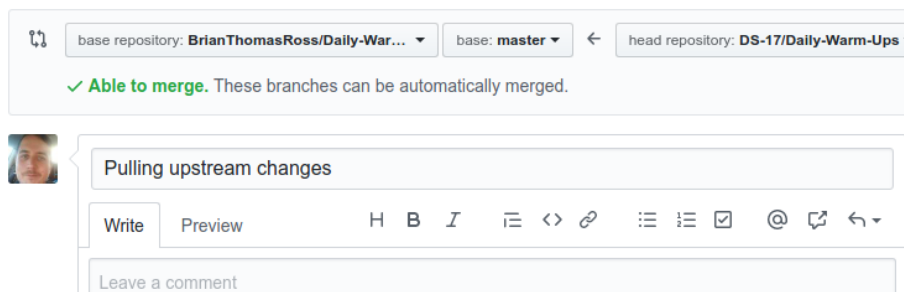

Then create pull request

Title the pull request appropriately

Open a pull request

Create a new pull request by comparing changes across two branches. If you need to, you can also compare across forks.

Then submit it and on the bottom of the next page you will see an option to merge the changes, click that and confirm, and ...

In the DS-17/Library repository you will find a copy of Pro Git

Take some time in your groups to skim through the book and share with the main channel any interesting things you find!

Also feel free to submit your own contributions to the DS17 Library, when submitting to the Library a template has been set up to assist in you in providing the proper information.
